RE: ASGA Comments for December 2024 Striped Bass Board Meeting

Dear Ms. Franke and Striped Bass Board Members,

The American Saltwater Guides Association (ASGA) represents conservation-minded fishing guides, private anglers, and fishing businesses who advocate for "Better Business through Conservation." ASGA remains steadfast in its commitment to rebuilding the Atlantic striped bass stock by 2029. However, we are deeply concerned about the long-term implications for the Spawning Stock Biomass (SSB), as six consecutive years of failed spawns will severely impact the adult stock in the coming years.

There is an enormous amount of uncertainty in projecting fishing mortality. This resulted in different scenarios that range from status quo to a 14% reduction that the Technical Committee found reasonable. The document states that: "The TC-SAS highlighted several major sources of uncertainty in the projections including the realized 2024 removals, the magnitude of the increase in F in 2025 that is expected to occur, and the F rate that the population will experience from 2026-2029."

We appreciate the opportunity to provide comments on this critical issue. ASGA recognizes the significant effort put into developing the Updated Projections and 2025 Management Considerations despite a short time-frame. Similarly, our window to review and submit feedback is short. Nevertheless, we offer the following input for potential management options.

ASGA Input on Management Options

1. No-Targeting Closures

- The assumption that Maryland exceeded its conservation goals through no-targeting closures is fundamentally flawed. When closures were first implemented in 2018, fishing effort remained static. By 2020, even with expanded closures, annual effort increased. Maryland's goals were met because fewer fish were available to be caught. This was a direct result of declining abundance. As the stock in the Chesapeake Bay collapses, both effort and catch per directed trip have declined. See Figure 1.
- Relying on a false assumption to build new measures is not a sound strategy for managing the most economically important fishery on the East Coast. The Law Enforcement Committee (LEC) has consistently stated that no-targeting closures are virtually unenforceable, rating them the least enforceable of 27 management guidelines with a score of 1.87 out of 5.

- No-targeting closures disproportionately affect regions with shorter fishing seasons. Guides and fishing businesses in these areas will face devastating economic impacts, with some businesses at risk of closure.

2. No-Harvest Closures

- While ASGA has traditionally supported no-harvest closures over no-targeting closures, the recently proposed no-harvest closures lack equity among states. States like Maine, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts have much shorter fishing seasons compared to southern states. A 50-day no-harvest period in Maine imposes a far greater burden than the same closure in New Jersey.
- Additionally, states with longer seasons can cherry-pick closure periods that minimize their impact, further exacerbating inequities. States with higher harvest rates and more access to the fishery should shoulder a proportionately greater share of reductions.

3. Adjusting the Slot Limit

- The Technical Committee (TC) has been tasked with exploring a smaller slot limit to protect the 2018-year class. ASGA views this as the only viable path forward. Historical data underscores the risks of maintaining the status quo. When the 2015-year class entered the slot, harvest levels increased by a million fish. A similar surge cannot be allowed to occur with the 2018-year class. Moving the slot lower will further protect both critical remaining year-classes.
- Projections using 2018 as a baseline fail to reflect the current reality. The robust 2015-year class is no longer available, and the time series does not account for this significant shift. While the spike in 2011 spawning production may resemble that of 2018, though still half the total production, the next 6 years of spawning production are non-existent after 2018. Using 2011-2018 time series as a proxy for juvenile abundance neglects the last 6 years of abysmal spawns and our crippling lack of juvenile fish. See Figure 2.

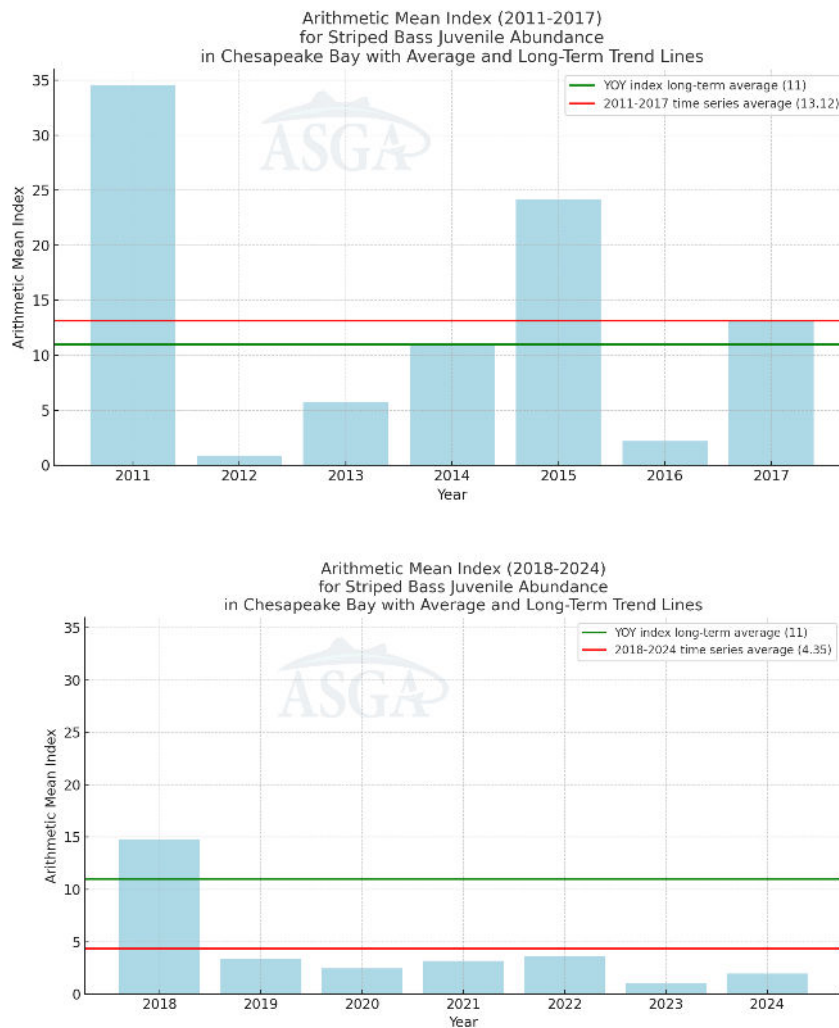

Figure 2. Arithmetic Mean Index by Time Series for Striped Bass Juvenile Abundance in Chesapeake Bay with Average and Long-Term Trends.

- Moving the slot limit downward to avoid targeting the 2018-year class is the best option for maintaining acceptable fishing mortality levels. This approach should be reassessed following the 2027 Benchmark Stock Assessment. Conversely, moving the slot upward would target the 2015-year class again, while keeping the slot static risks repeating the mistakes of 2022 and 2023.

4. Equity Between Commercial and Recreational Reductions

- If the board decides on a percent reduction, it must be equal across sectors. Commercial reductions must come off harvest and not quota, otherwise it is a worthless exercise. A reduction is not realized if taken from fish that are not caught.
- Anchored gill net fisheries that intercept large females on their way to spawn must end. Six years of spawning failures have left us in an almost impossible situation. In the face of management challenges and specific environmental requirements, netting adult females before they spawn is negligent.

Conclusion

The Striped Bass Management Board is out of time to act decisively. Further delays or missteps will exacerbate the challenges facing this critical fishery. The undersigned organizations, guides, fishing businesses, and conservation-minded anglers strongly advocate for lowering the slot limit to protect the 2018-year class, minimize harvest, and sustain the fishing economy. This approach balances conservation needs with economic realities, ensuring a future for both striped bass populations and the communities that depend on them.

Consider the following brands, businesses and individuals who have expressed their support for striped bass conservation. Please note that ASGA does not duplicate brand & business logos from past calls to action. All the undersigned have thoughtfully considered this individual management action and committed their support.

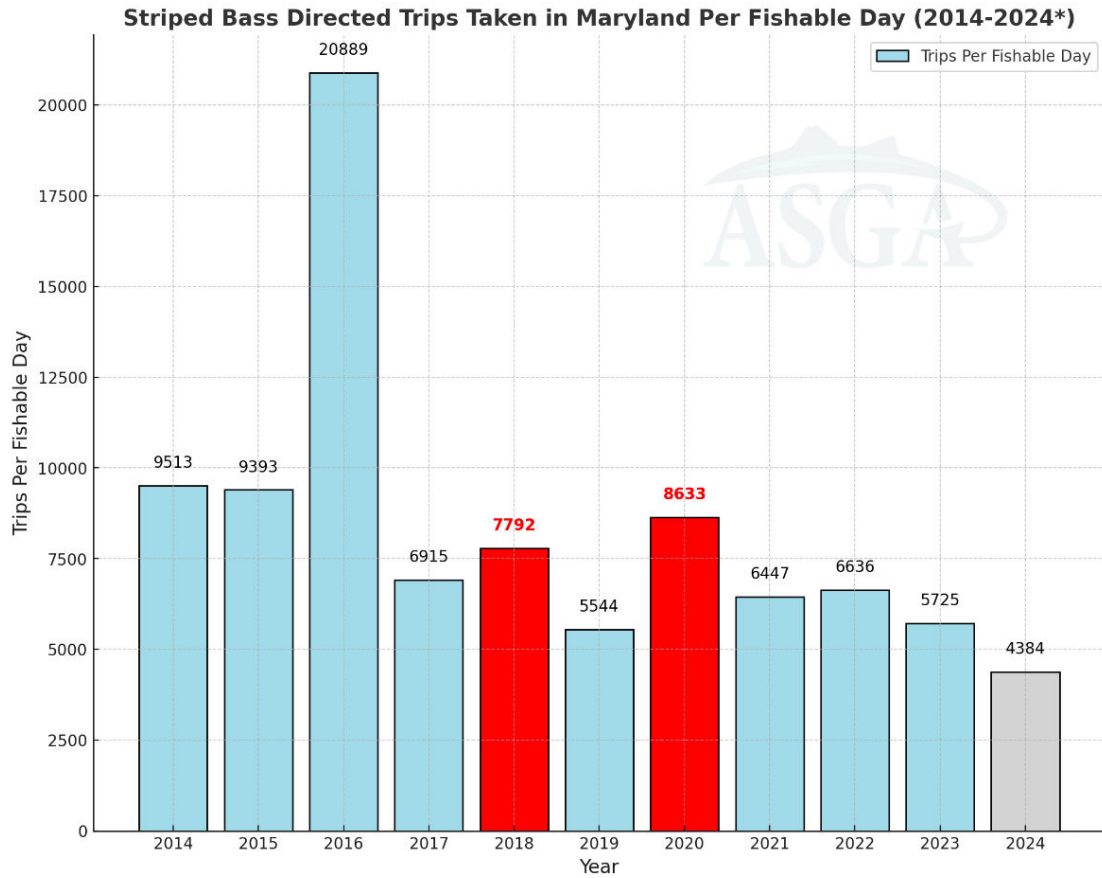

On Behalf of the ASGA Community,

Tony Friedrich
President & Policy Director
